Strategic Foresight Session

What will be the role of the public, private, and not-for-profit sectors, and of patients, in Canadian health care in 2035?

The goal of a strategic foresight exercise is to offer insights to decision-makers in governments, businesses, and other organizations on how best to prepare for all possibilities, what they might do to shift toward a future they prefer, and how to recognize and adapt to events and trends that may point toward a specific future.

In this session, Dr. Satyamoorthy Kabilan will lead the group into further examination of the roles of different players in the health care system from a funding, services delivery, and governance perspective. As this session will be held as a half-day workshop, we will be working from the four scenarios developed from CASHC’s last strategic foresight workshop entitled “How will health care in Canada be funded in 2035?”. It is advised for participants to review these scenarios in advance of the workshop. The discussion will contribute to a briefing to be published early 2017.

Dr. Satyamoorthy Kabilan (Kabi) is The Conference Board of Canada’s Director of National Security and Strategic Foresight. Kabi leads the National Security and Public Safety team and strategic foresight practice. He co-founded and managed two technology start-ups and has been a leader in the UK’s Future Security and Intelligence Outlook Network (FUSION). In addition, he has been involved in developing the UK’s National Counter Terrorism Strategy (CONTEST), supported the capability development of the soon to be established National Crime Agency, and worked on future force development for the UK’s Ministry of Defence. He led CASHC’s strategic foresight workshop in 2015 on “‘How will health care in Canada be funded in 2035?’.”

Keynote Speaker

Ensuring Health Care System Sustainability: Visionary and Strategic Approaches to Partnerships Among Health Policy Stakeholders

Louise Binder is a lawyer who has been involved in informing the development of health policy and systemic treatment access practices from a patient perspective for more than 20 years. She started her work in this area in the HIV community in the early 1990s after her own diagnosis and before effective treatments were available for HIV. She cofounded the Canadian Treatment Action Council (CTAC) in 1996 that successfully ensured access to treatments and quality care for people living with HIV by working with the federal and provincial governments and other relevant stakeholders to enhance drug review and approval systems, pricing policies and access to liver transplants for this community. She wrote a paper on Universal Drug Coverage a decade ago while Chair of CTAC. She had a special interest in women's issues, chairing the Ontario women’s organization Voice of Positive Women for over a decade. She has been involved in these issues internationally as well.

Two years ago Louise began similar work in the cancer area and she is presently Health Policy Consultant for the Canadian Cancer Survivor Network. She has been recognized by many organizations for her work including receiving an Honorary Doctorate of Laws from her alma mater Queen’s Law School, the Order of Ontario, and two Queen Elizabeth II medals.
