

Council of Chief Information Officers.

As organizations strive to compete in a rapidly changing, highly complex business environment, information technology (IT) has become a vital, strategic asset in building competitive advantage. The Council of Chief Information Officers (CCIO) provides the opportunity to discover how leading-edge private and public sector CIOs are addressing emerging challenges and building strategic advantage through information technology. The Council addresses executive leadership challenges such as strategy, change management, and innovation, through a CIO lens. By design, the Council allows for deep exploration of emerging topics and the formation of meaningful peer-CIO relationships, all in a closed door, private setting.

Key Objective

- To be a forum for open, strategic discussion and the exchange of ideas related to the leadership and management of information technology.

Who Should Join

CCIO is for senior leaders who have overall strategic responsibility for the information technology management function in their organization.

Exclusive Benefits of Membership

- Exchange views on the most vital issues facing corporate management in a relaxed, forthright, and interactive manner.
- Learn how other leading-edge organizations are managing the challenge of change.
- Gain access to an exclusive, independent network of senior executives.
- Access Conference Board research specific to current, best, and next practices in areas of leadership and information technology.
