Council of Chief Information Officers

As organizations strive to compete in a rapidly changing, highly complex business environment, information technology (IT) has become a vital, strategic asset in building competitive advantage. The Council of Chief Information Officers (CCIO) provides the opportunity to discover how leading-edge private and public sector CIOs are addressing emerging challenges and building strategic advantage through information technology.
The Council of Chief Information Officers provides personal and professional development opportunities for CIOs on topics such as strategy, change management, cyber security, and innovation. By design, the Council allows for deep exploration of emerging topics through peer-to-peer CIO relationships in a closed-door, private setting, allowing for frank and meaningful discussion with experts and peers dealing with the same challenges.

Key objective

To be a forum for open, strategic discussion and the exchange of ideas related to the leadership and management of information technology.

Who should join

CCIO is for senior leaders who have overall strategic responsibility for the information technology management function in their organization.

Exclusive benefits of membership

- Exchange views on the most vital issues facing corporate management in a relaxed, forthright, and interactive manner.
- Learn how other leading-edge organizations are managing the challenge of change.
- Gain access to an exclusive, independent network of senior executives.
- Access Conference Board research specific to current, best, and next practices in areas of leadership and information technology.
